A color pencil with a two-color gradient

This is a colored pencil with a two-color gradient. Friends of comic creation will encounter such a problem: when selecting color paintings, there are often cases where the color is not enough, and the superposition of single color lead colors is blunt and unnatural. The pen looks like a double-headed colored pencil, but it's actually a brush for "harmonizing" colors. All colors are composed of two adjacent colors. Through different pen-holding methods, the final strokes and colors will be variable and flexible. Different colors will be written at different lengths, so every pen in use is full of expectations. At the same time, the gradation of color and color has more possibilities, blending with each other to meet different picture effects, and there is also a visual "communication" and interaction between the stationery and the user. When writing with the side, the handwriting is rich in thickness and the color on the stroke will be gradual - the alternating and blending of colors is expressed in such a beautiful way that the writing and creation process become pleasant and interesting.
